By Appointment.

The Jakobertorturm is one of the few relics in existence of the old fortifications of Augsburg, by the gateway of which Gustave Adolphus entered the town in 1632. In the 15th and 16th centuries Augsburg was a town of great importance. It was a free imperial City and many of its citizens were powerful and wealthy personages. A notable example was the Fugger family, in their day the richest merchants in Europe.
